The way to build up a town is to believe in it, become inspired with the fact that there is a future in store for it, and for everyone to lend a helping hand to make it what it ought to be. There is local pride, this is local public spirit, which does not hesitate to make a present sacrifice in the faith that it will make the town we live in better in the future. -Bellair Breeze.

Newspapers, though everybody does not think so, are always paid for in advance. If the thoughtful subscriber doesn't do it the proprietor has to do so. The paper and ink manufacturer and printer will not wait till a year, or perhaps half a dozen years expire, before they get their pay. The subscriber should think of this. -E.E.

Advertising on the fences, by painting on boards, stones, stumps, etc., like epitaphs on tomb stones, speaks to the passers by and warns them that as they, the old firm spoken of on the fence are now defunct, so they will shortly be. As a man rides along reading these epitaphs, approaching any town, he cannot help thinking he is getting into a dead place. All live men in business have their ads in their local newspapers. -E.E.

The American Agriculturist

For January announces, that it enters upon the new year under unusually auspicious circumstances. The old editorial force, who have been connected with that periodical for periods, running up to a quarter of a century, has received further accessions in Dr. F. M. Hexamer, so long the editor of the "American Garden," and Mr. Chester P. Dewey, a writer of national reputation, and Mr. Seth Green, the noted Fish Culturist. The illustrations, of which they are a very large number, represent noted horses, cattle, pigs, cows, new fruits, new potatoes, designs for new buildings, farm conveniences, household conveniences, fruits, flowers, etc., etc. The full-page engravings present two beautiful and appropriate winter scenes, executed in such a manner as to greatly please the eye. There are nearly one hundred original different articles on the Milk Supply of Cities, Polled Cattle, Infectious Diseases on the Farm, Landscapes Planting for Winter Effect, Wheat Experiments, The Best Lighting Rods, Clydesdales Horses, Work for the Winter Months, A New Quince, Cattle Stanchions, The Household and Children's Department abound in illustrations, while several new frauds are exposed in Hambug Department. Prices, $2.00 per year; single numbers, 15 cents. Address, American Agriculturist, 751 Broadway, New York.

The New York Sun calls attention to the curious fact that Mark Twain's article, in the December CENTURY, entitled, "The private history of a Campaign that failed," is by an odd coincidence, contemporaneous supplement to chapter 15 in the first volume, just printed, of General Grant's memoirs. It appears that the only time that General Grant was really scared was when he had to meet the little army in which his future publisher was a private. At Palmyra, Grant, then a colonel, was ordered to move against Col. Thomas Harris, who was said to be encamped at the little town of Florida, some twenty-five miles away. In his memoirs, General Grant tells how his heart kept getting higher and higher as he approached the enemy, until he felt it in his throat, but when he reached a point where he expected to see them and found they had fled, his heart resumed its place. Mark Twain was one of the "enemy," and that he and his fellow soldiers were equally frightened appears in his frank confession in the December CENTURY. The difference between the two soldiers was that Mark Twain was thrown into such trepidation that he then and there abandoned the profession of arms, whereas General Grant made on that occasion the discovery that the enemy were as much afraid of him as he had been of them. This is a fact which General Grant, in view of the question I have never taken before, but it was one I never forgot afterward. From that event to the close of the war, I never experienced trepidation upon confronting an enemy, though I always felt more or less anxiety.
